OVER THE MOON

In the pleasant light of a starry night,
On the edge of a placid lagoon—
Like a speck of sand in an endless land,
The Seekers shot the Moon.

Far out of range, but hoping for change,
Their mission, at its core:
To chart a course and boldly go
Where no one had before.

They took their shot from the proper spot,
Frozen forever in time—
Concealing a riddle, right in the middle
Of an old, familiar rhyme...

*Hey diddle diddle, the cat and the fiddle
The cow jumped over the Moon
The little dog laughed to see such craft
And the dish ran away with the spoon.*

They leapt through the air on a wing and a prayer,
Hurling toward their fate—
To soar and turn, with space to burn,
A perfect figure eight.

Ending their dance across the expanse
With a backward little lurch,
They stuck the landing, rose from the dust,
And marked the spot to search.

They left the goods at a notch in the woods,
Abandoning their ride—
And numbered the stars from the Moon to Mars
To light their way back to the hide.

This is a Norse tale about a small hamlet and a sea monster. It is an armchair treasure hunt, there is no need to go boots on the ground. If you follow the story and clues on the parchment, you will have to answer one question. You may be asked to explain the steps of how you arrived at your solution. No knowledge of the show, "Squid Games" is required, however, google will help with some of the puzzle. The answer is not a kracken, so don't even bother to try that one!

Answers are to be emailed to TheArtofHiddenMessages@gmail.com

Please put in the email Subject Line, "Squid Game"

Good luck and have fun!

Winnow is a small hamlet on the edge of a peninsula. Comfortable wooden houses sit on winding streets and alleys. Valleys bring rich glacier-formed soil to the area. The people farm and raise cows that wear bells and freely roam the fields. However, it is fishing that sustains the clan who lives here. But there is a mystery here as well. A dark mystery that goes back centuries.

Here, a predator roams the depths of the sea. It could strike at any time and steal a life. It has been known to silently rise to the surface and snatch babies who are playing in the sand along the seaside. Without warning, it sinks whole ships. Even the Vikings will not sail near this peninsula for fear of being attacked and killed.

Over the years, the clan has learned how to make peace and live with the predator that roams the sea, for they have struck a deal. The members of the hamlet have agreed to feed the monster at the same time, every day. In return, the monster will not attack. The people will be free to fish on their boats at any time or play in the sand on the beach, without fear.

As they have been doing for centuries, each day, an assigned male clan member goes to a high cliff with a sacrifice. The sacrifice could be a pig, a cow, a criminal, or even someone who wandered unknowingly into Winnow, an unlucky stranger. The monster will rise silently from the depths to receive his gift.

Fred was assigned many times to feed the monster. His wife, Alice, was curious about the beast and asked to see it again and again. Fred's reply was always the same, only males were allowed to see and feed the monster. It was the centuries old custom written in an ancient tome. But one day, Fred gave in and allowed Alice to accompany him to feed the monster. The monster was smitten with Alice, and asked for her to be his meal instead of the pig that Fred had brought on his cart. Fred replied that he would rather not waste the pig, and would return the next day only with his wife on the cart. The monster accepted this. Of course, Fred did not want to feed his wife to the monster! That night, he went to every cow that the clan owned, and removed their cowbell. He had a cart full of bells that made an awful clanging, but that is exactly what he wanted.

III ^ XIX II ^ XIX ^ XII

The next day, Fred took the cart full of bells, and his wife to the cliff. The monster's head slowly appeared out of the water, mouth open, ready to devour Alice. Instead of pushing Alice over the cliff, Fred dumped the cart full of bells into the monster's mouth! Down they went inside the beast where they remain to this day. The monster can now be heard approaching, giving plenty of warning to those who live in the small hamlet and beyond.

After Chester mouse finished his last piece of cheese with a dab of mustard on top, he slumped. And after Molly mouse swallowed her last piece of cheese, she slumped. They grimaced at each other. "I still don't know what we can do," Molly whimpered. "Either do I," Chester mumbled.

They both had hoped that after their snack an idea for something to do would come to them. But even though their bellies were full, their minds were still left empty of a thought.

Mama mouse noticed their gloominess and asked, "What are you two frowning about?"

Molly and Chester grumbled, "We can't find anything to do. We're bored." Mama mouse smiled. She asked, "Have you looked for something to do?"

"We can't think of anything to do," Molly said. Chester slouched lower in his chair. He was feeling even gloomier. "I'm not sure there is anything to do."

"Hmmm. I see," Mama mouse said while sweeping the floor. "Usually when someone can't find something, they search for it. When I was younger, I remember I had trouble finding things to do sometimes. They are hidden quite well now and again. Fortunately, Grandma mouse told me a secret that helped with that situation."

Molly perked up. "A secret?" "Will you tell it to us?" Chester asked. "Of course," replied Mama mouse. Chester and Molly slid off their chairs and huddled closely to Mama mouse. She whispered to them, "The magic to finding is in seeking. Grandma mouse told me to follow a secret called The Quest."

THE QUEST

Molly and Chester smiled wide. Their frowns turned upside down. They excitedly listened to Mama mouse as she shared the secret with them.
